The epithelium of the jejunum and ileum of the postnatal rat was dissociated and cultured to test the ability of the epithelial cells to undergo neuronal differentiation. Bipolar neurons, identified by antibodies to the neuron-specific enolase and tubulin, emerged between 10-15 days in culture. The neurons grown from the cells of the ileum differentiated more readily than those from the cells of the jejunum.In patients with chronic periodontitis, interleukin 1 (IL-1) is expressed in the epithelium and subepithelium. Although the presence of interleukin 1 (IL-1) has been established in the diseased periodontium, the cellular source of this molecule in human tissues is not known. The present study was designed to investigate whether IL-1 is produced by epithelial cells in both normal and diseased periodontal tissues. Using immunohistochemical staining methods, IL-1 was detected in the gingiva of patients with chronic periodontitis and stained predominantly in the epithelial cells lining the gingival sulcus. Additionally, a greater staining intensity in the epithelium was also observed in periodontally diseased compared to non-periodontally diseased specimens. Using the reverse transcription-polymerase chain reaction, messenger RNA for IL-1 was detected in both cultured gingival epithelial cells and in cells of a human gingival fibroblast cell line. These results imply that epithelial cells are one source of IL-1 in the diseased periodontium.The world has been talking about Trump for the last eight years and what he'll do to America and the world if he is elected. Millions of US citizens already feel like he is doing it to them. But what if he actually does do it?
