The first game in the series, Digimon Master, is an RPG game originally released on the MSX2 platform, and a direct sequel to the original Digimon World. It is also an early example of a role-playing game utilizing the TRS-80 Model III (XT) hardware platform, providing compatibility with the MicroMuse games. Digimon Masters Online's objectives are similar to those of the first game; the player is tasked with training and travelling with a local Digimon and combating various enemies. The gameplay is divided into three parts; "Training" (), "Digi-Tour" (), and "Battle" (). Training provides the player with the Digimon's attack strength, ability to perform various special effects, and various other statistics.

Digi-Tour allows the player to travel around the various Digimon's habitat in a fashion similar to that of the "Digi-Travel" mode in the first game, but without any of the Digimon's evolved forms; it is a walking simulator. Finally, Battle allows the player to fight against various powerful opponents and defeat them. Many elements from the first game, including the General Info Page, are included in the gameplay in the second. Some elements of the game are similar to those in Digimon Adventure and Digimon World, such as the Palkia form and the Rookie form of the Digimon character. The game utilizes a "Dream Digimon" that the player can acquire in Battle, as well as producing various "Mega Tears" that can be used to strengthen a Digimon's item ability or special effect. A second game, Digimon Master Online, was released on September 29, 2006. It was developed by a different company, Sanzigen Inc. and the user interface for the game was not produced by Bandai Namco. The game was a spin-off of the Digimon Masters" series, and thus features the same game engine as the previous game in the series. In addition to the basic gameplay, players could obtain and raise Digimon through "Online Battles". There were many elements that were newly introduced in the game, such as "Title Breaks" when the player defeats a certain number of enemies in Battle.
